

INCLUSIVE INVESTING: RESPECTING THE RIGHTS OF VULNERABLE ADULTS THROUGH SUPPORTED DECISION MAKING

The Canadian Centre for Elder Law is conducting a public consultation to learn about how people with a range of cognitive impairments (for example, adults living with intellectual disabilities, dementia, or Alzheimer's) use supported decision-making to make decisions about their investments. Our project examines the experiences in both British Columbia and Ontario.

We are interested in talking to:

- Adults living with living with intellectual or developmental disabilities, Alzheimer's disease, or other forms of dementia
- Supporters of adults living with the above challenges, and who assist those adults to make decisions about their investments

Topics we would like to discuss:

- What do you know about supported decision making?
- How do you use supported decision making to make investment decisions?
- Your experience working with investment advisors when using (or attempting to use) supported decision making.
- Any barriers, concerns or issues you identified from your experiences.

The goal of this project is to enhance understanding of and access to supported decision making in the investment context.
